NIGLON'S HELPING YOU MANAGE

An electrical installation project isn't just about making sure the right products are used in the right place: as any good contractor knows, they also need to plan ahead to ensure the final look is as aesthetically pleasing as possible. There's also the pertinent matter of keeping everyone using the area as safe as possible.

Both the safety and the clean look can be achieved through incorporating cable management products into the installation – and selecting the right products from the get-go is essential to ensure the project goes ahead as quickly and smoothly as you'd hope.

Niglon knows that being able to choose from a wide range of products makes life easier and that's why the company has researched, developed and stocked up on more than 650 different cable management products, which include conduit boxes and fittings, support bracketry, brass gland packs, flexible conduit, adaptable boxes and resin cable joints.

Of course, cable management is just one of the aspects offered at Niglon, so the company's valued customers are also able to choose from in excess of 4,000 wiring accessories, industrial accessories, circuit protection devices, tools and fixtures, control and automation, and general lighting products.

Conduit fittings are one of Niglon's top selling products

Conduit fittings

Incredibly, Niglon has been supplying conduit fittings to the electrical industry for more than 50 years. It might not be the first product which comes to mind when people think of Niglon, but they're actually one of its top selling products and has been for many years.

This goes to show that while many things have changed in the industry over the decades – and as suppliers the company is constantly looking at how it can evolve to meet the needs of the contractors using its products on their installations – the tried and tested reliable products tend to stick around, remaining loved and well-used by each new generation of installers.

When it comes to conduit boxes and fittings, Niglon has got everything you'll need covered – and the great news is, with more than 1,500 electrical wholesalers stocking Niglon throughout the UK, you're never too far from a stockist. This network is also backed up by the company's extensive stock holding at its centrally located distribution centre in the West Midlands.

Heavy duty cable protector

A more recent addition to the Niglon range is the heavy duty three channel cable protector which has been independently tested by TUV – one of the world leaders in product testing and certification. The product can take loads of up to 7,500kg and, for ease of transportation, arrives in 910mm sections – then as many sections as needed can be simply clicked together when on site.

Niglon has also incorporated design features which make installation as simple as possible – such as the hinged lid which allows the cable to be easily laid into place. And with safety being a primary concern, the protectors are made using a chequer-plate pattern which means they're anti-slip, therefore suitable for lots of different environments.

Brass gland packs

From standard BW and CW options to LSF, CXT and flameproof products – available in sizes ranging from 20mm to 75mm – Niglon has it all when it comes to brass gland packs.

Commercial director, Paul Dawson, comments: "These products have been flying off the shelves, especially in the past 12 months, over which we've seen a 50% growth in sales in this area. This has mainly come from the rise in people working from home during the pandemic, meaning there's a greater need for home offices. Businesses have also needed to change how they trade and interact with their customers, which again has required the installation of these types of products."

Flexible conduits

Niglon has you covered when it comes to flexible conduits, with a comprehensive range of options from 12mm to 50mm in diameter. The competitively priced contractor packs come complete with glands and are fantastic for many standard applications. However, the company knows that more demanding installations will require different conduits, and that's why it offers galvanised steel, liquid resistant, and liquid tight variants too.

Resin cable joints are an essential for contractors who are repairing damaged cables

Resin cable joints

Resin cable joints are an essential for contractors who are repairing damaged cables – or for those needing to extend a power cable using an existing length with a new one. Many installers keep resin cable joints as part of their regular kit to ensure they've got some on hand whenever needed. That's why Niglon offers kits which can joint cables as small as 1.5mm² and as large as 300mm².

And of course, because Niglon is committed to ensuring safety at all times, its kits are approved to BS EN 50393:2006-11 standards – safe and handy, what's not to like?

Why choose Niglon?

Niglon knows a good product speaks volumes when it comes to choosing which supplier to opt for – but the company also believes that its job is much more than that. As a fourth-generation family owned and run firm, Niglon has retained the personal customer service that stood the company in good stead when the business first launched. Nearly 80 years later, its product ranges may have expanded almost beyond the imagination of the company's founder – but the high-quality service he demanded from his first members of staff has remained the core of the Niglon ethos.

While Niglon is a fan of traditional good customer service, it is a truly modern company – with a purpose-built headquarters situated in the heart of England to match. Niglon was one of the first in the industry to adopt revolutionary stock fulfilment processes; has invested heavily and retained a continual focus on research and development; and prides itself on its long-standing commitment to independent third-party certification, to ensure all products are rigorously tested.

Niglon is also more than happy to talk you through its extensive ranges – whether you're after cable management or products from any of the other supply categories the company specialises in. So, do give Niglon a call or get in touch via the website below.
